

Celebrities form a stable relationship

Two equine celebrities came face to face at Melbourne Museum yesterday.

Joey, the life-size horse puppet from the theatre production War Horse, paid a visit to Australia's racetrack legend Phar Lap.

Melbourne Museum manager Brett Dunlop said seeing the two together was a delight.

"It was a great opportunity for us," Mr Dunlop said.

"Phar Lap has been seen by more than 10 million people and gained many fans over the years, and Joey is becoming increasingly popular."

War Horse, a life-affirming show about friendship, courage and family, has toured the world to rave reviews.

The Melbourne production is playing at The Arts Centre until March 10.
